COMMON ERRORS.-Ignorant folk, wouderdisseminated many erroneous and exaggerated notions which are not readily eradi-Norwegian maelstrom, a frightful whirling chasm in the sea capable of sucking down the largest ships, though in reality this fearful "whirlpool" is simply a run of the tide through a sloping channel, is rarely dangerous, and then chiefly on account of the rocks on which it may draw vessels. Sir John Herschel gave his indorsement to the statement that stars may be seen in the daytime from the hottom of a well, but this has been from the bottom of a well, but this has been proved to be an error by tests from a shaft nearly half a mile deep.

Mr. John Murdoch has recently shown that the Eskimos do not, as text books of physiology affirm, doze through their long winter nights, keeping up their bodily heat by enormous meals of raw blubber and lamp oil, but that their winter life is active, their food mostly cooked and their consumption of oil not excessive. A still widely accepted be-lief is that the hair snake is a wonderful transformation of a horse's hair when kept in water, though these odd creatures (known to science as Gordius aquaticus) really grow from eggs, and in early stages inhabit the bodies of insects. A very old idea, without foundation in fact, is that crocodiles shed mournful tears, while stories of toads imprisoned in solid rock are numerous and eupported by much evidence, but have probably resulted from imperfect observa-

Accounts of the germination of grain from the nummy pits of Egypt have grisen from deception practiced by the Arabs in placing fresh seeds with the belongings of the mummies. Though now known to be incorrect, the inference that the moon influences the weather is a very natural one to untrained observers, and is far less absurd than a thousand vagaries that gain credence, such as the dropping of live reptiles from the clouds, the ejection of live snakes and other creatures from the human stom-ach, the localization of water by a forked stick, the extinguishment of fire by sun-shine, etc.—Arkansaw Traveller.

THE GREAT CHINESE WALL .- The Great Wall of China is in fine condition where I examined it, thought ruinous in parts. It is from 25 to 30 feet high, 15 to 20 feet thick, and revetted outside and in with cut granite masonry laid in regular courses, with an excellent mortar of lime and sand. It is surmounted by a parapet or battlement of gray burned brick 18 or 20 inches thick, covered with moss and pierced with crenelated openings for the defenders, whether archers matchlockmen, to fire through. rear or inner revetment wall is also furnish-ed with a lower parapet but is not crene-The top is paved with a double lay er of brick about a foot square. The in-side of the wall is made of earth and loose stone, well rammed in. Every 200 or 300 yards there is a flanking turret 35 or 40 feet high, projecting beyond and overlooking the face of the wall in both directions, and near each turret is a stone staircase leading down between the walls to a door opening upon the ground in the rear. The most astonishing thing about it is, however, that it climbs straight up the steepest and most rugged mountain sides, courses along their summits, descends into gorges and ravines and, rising again, skirts the face of almost inaccessible orags, crosses rivers, valleys and plains in endless succession from one end of the empire to the other-from the seashore on the gulf of Pe-Chee-Lee to the desert wastes of Turkestan.
